"There are very few faces that are not made prettier by the softening of loosely dressed hair or soft laces about them," said pretty Lillian Gish. "The beauty and fairy personality of little Red Ridinghood would be gone if we had divested her of her characteristic cloak with its soft silken hood. Both women of the stage and of the screen understand this and that is why you see them so often with their faces against a background of silk, velvet or lace.

"One thing the movie screen teaches every girl who seeks beauty and that is that grace, personality and individuality count for more than regular features or even an exquisite complexion.

"Criticize yourself as you do others; make the most of your good points and above all after you leave your dressing room in the morning forget your looks as self-consciousness is always fatal to beauty."
